2.1 If you visit the www.jura.hu website (data recorded automatically and cookies)

2.1.1 Data recorded automatically

If you visit our website, certain information will be recorded automatically about your device (e.g. laptop, PC, phone or tablet). This information includes your IP address, date and time of your visit, the pages visited, website from which access was made or from which you were directed to our website, type of browser and operating system used, and domain name and address of your Internet service provider. This information will be automatically logged by the web server that hosts our website without any special statement or action from you. Statistical data are automatically generated by our system based on this information. These data cannot be linked to other personal data except in cases provided for by the law. We use these data solely in an aggregated and processed form in order to correct any faults in our systems and improve the quality of our services, as well as for statistical purposes.

Purpose of data processing: Technical development of our IT system, control of the functioning of the service, production of statistics and protection of the visitors’ rights. In the event of abuses, personal data can also be used to determine the perpetrators of such abuses in cooperation with the Internet service provider of visitors and the competent authorities.

2.1.2 Use of cookies

What is a cookie?

A cookie is a small text file that is stored on the hard drive of your computer or mobile device until the expiration date set in the given cookie, and is activated (sends information back to the web server) during later visits. Websites use cookies to capture information concerning visits (pages visited, time spent on individual pages, browsing data, when the user leaves a page, etc.) and personal settings. Cookies help us build a user-friendly website and enhance the visitors’ online experience.

On other platforms, where cookies are unavailable or cannot be used, other technologies having a similar purpose may be used, such as advertising IDs on Android devices.

There are two types of cookies, the so-called “session (or transient) cookies” and “persistent cookies”. Both types of cookies are stored in the browser’s file directory until the user deletes them.

- “Session cookies” are stored in the temporary memory of your computer, notebook or mobile device and they are not retained after you have left the website. These cookies help the system remember your information so that you do not have to re-enter or complete that information again and again. Session cookies expire at the end of each user session, and are intended to prevent data loss (for example, when completing a long form). This type of cookies is automatically deleted from the user’s computer when the session ends or the browser is closed.
- “Persistent cookies” are stored on your computer, notebook or mobile device even after you exit the site. These cookies allow the site to recognize you as a returning visitor. Persistent cookies, by associating IDs with users on the server side, are capable of identifying you, for example, in all cases where user authentication is indispensable (e.g. webshop, online banking, webmail) and a necessary condition for proper operation. Persistent cookies do not store personal data, and can only be used to identify a user together with the associated information stored in the server’s database. The risk inherent in this type of cookies is that they do not actually identify the user but the browser, and therefore, if someone logs into an online store in a public place (e.g. an Internet café) and forgets to log out upon leaving the workstation, another person, using the same computer may gain unauthorized access to the online store in the original user’s name.

What types of cookies we use?
